Congress created the District of Columbia as the seat of the federal government on 16 July 1790. On 9 September 1791 George Washington appointed three commissioners to lay out the city, although the federal government did not relocate to the District of Columbia until 1801. The area chosen as the seat of government was carved from Fairfax County, Virginia (created in 1742), and from parts of Prince George’s (created 1695) and Montgomery (created 1776) counties, Maryland. The area taken from Virginia was returned to that state in 1846.

By 1800 the District’s population was about 14,000, but the federal government was still operating in Philadelphia. In the interim before the government relocated, residents of the District used record-keeping services in Fairfax County, Virginia, and Montgomery County, Maryland, until local government offices were established. By 1820, the population had grown to about 33,000 as more government jobs were made available and retail businesses grew to accommodate the populace. Those moving into the area came mainly from surrounding states, but some merchants arrived from Europe. African Americans have always been a major element of the District’s population, and their number increased dramatically during the Civil War and Reconstruction era. Nearly twenty percent of the total population in 1860 was made up of free African Americans; slightly more than four percent were slaves.

Tracing families in the District of Columbia requires a complete understanding of the record periods and jurisdictions and the tenacity to track them down in one of the many repositories. Records for those living in the area created for the District of Columbia before 1801 have to be sought either in Maryland’s or Virginia’s records. When the portion of Virginia originally taken to create the District of Columbia was returned in 1846, the pre-1846 records were returned as well.

District of Columbia Census Records

When the first federal census was taken in 1790, residents of Washington D.C. were enumerated in two separate states. Those living north of the Potomac River were enumerated with Prince George’s and Montgomery counties in Maryland. Those south of the river were listed with Virginians; however, Virginia’s census for 1790 was destroyed. Although the 1800 census has survived, no federal census returns exist for the District of Columbia for 1810. Beginning in 1820, enumerations exist for each decennial except for the mostly destroyed 1890 census. All of the population schedules are available at the National Archives in the Microfilm Reading Room, and through the Family History Library and its centers. The following census collections are available on Ancestry:

Significant Dates (through 1925)

1789—Georgetown University was founded by Jesuit priests in what would soon become the District of Columbia.
1790—The Residence Act was passed making a 10-mile, diamond-shaped tract at the confluence of the Potomac and East Branch Rivers the permanent capital of the United States. It was established on land chosen by George Washington and ceded to the federal government by the states of Maryland and Virginia.
1800—The White House was completed and John and Abigail Adams became its first residents. The 6th U.S. Congress was the first to meet in the new, unfinished U.S. Capitol, also home to the Library of Congress, D.C. courts, and the Supreme Court.
1814—The British burned the new Capitol building, the White House, the Treasury, and the building housing the Departments of State, Navy, and War. Americans began the burning of the Navy Yard prior to the arrival of the British, and the British burned what was left of it. A severe thunderstorm the following day, wrought even more damage to the city.
1815—The Library of Congress was re-established with Thomas Jefferson’s personal library of 6,487 books.
1829—The inauguration of Andrew Jackson got out of hand when hordes of people showed up at the White House for his open house. The president escaped the festivities, while the crowds ruined the furnishings and carpets.
1839—Dueling was outlawed in Washington, D.C., although this did not stop the practice as parties could circumvent prosecution by crossing over to Maryland, where it remained legal.
1844—Samuel F.B. Morse sent the first message by telegraph from Washington, D.C. to Baltimore, Maryland. His message read, “What hath God wrought?”
1846—The Smithsonian Institution was established by an Act of Congress thanks to the generous gift of James Smithson, a British scientist, who bequeathed 100,000 gold sovereigns to the United States to found “an establishment for the increase and diffusion of knowledge.”
1847—The portion of Washington, D.C., on the Virginia side of the Potomac River was returned to the state of Virginia.
1848—The cornerstone of the Washington Monument was laid, although it would not be completed until 1884.
1850—The Compromise of 1850 banned the sale of slaves in the District of Columbia, although slavery was still permitted.
1860—There were three times as many free African-Americans in Washington, D.C. as slaves.
1861-1865—The Civil War brought the need for defenses in and around the capital. By 1862 a network of 48 forts and batteries protected the city and by the end of the war, there were 68 forts and 93 detached batteries defending the city.
1862—Slavery was abolished in Washington, D.C.
1864—Confederate forces under General Jubal Early attempted to take Washington, D.C.
1865—President Abraham Lincoln was shot and killed at Ford’s Theater in Washington, D.C. The plot also included plans to assassinate Vice President Andrew Johnson and Secretary of State William Seward, and while Seward was attacked in bed and stabbed, he survived. George Atzerodt, who was tasked with killing the vice-president didn’t go through with his assignment.
1867—African American men 21 or older were granted the right to vote in Washington D.C.
1867—A charter is granted to Howard University in Washington, D.C. Initially a theological school for African American ministers, but it expanded to educate former slaves in the fields of the liberal arts and medicine, as well.
1870—The 15th Amendment was passed, stating the “right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.”
